

Moyaone Reserve Added to the National Register of Historic Places

Placement on the Register by the U.S. Department of the Interior protects historic resources

Nestled in the woods of Piscataway Park next to the Potomac River is the mid-century community of Moyaone Reserve.

Preservation Maryland's Heritage Fund, in partnership with the Maryland Historical Trust, recently helped fund the costs associated with the nomination of Moyaone Reserve to the National Register of Historic Places. The nomination process was spearheaded by the Moyaone Association. In addition to the Heritage Fund, funding was provided by the Mount Vernon Ladies Association and Prince George's County.

The National Register of Historic Places is the official list of the Nation's historic places worthy of preservation. Authorized by the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966, the National Park Service's National Register of Historic Places is part of a national program to coordinate and support public and private efforts to identify, evaluate, and protect America's historic and archeological resources.

Thanks to our generous donors, Preservation Maryland is able to continue to support the preservation of our region's irreplaceable land, objects and communities.

The new Moyaone Reserve Historic District will encompass over 120 contributing single-family homes along with undeveloped parcels including protected marshland and the mid-century Wagner Community Center. The homes showcase a range of styles and many of them are designed to work in visual harmony with the natural environment that surrounds them. This connection to the natural environment was present in the community from the beginning of planning for the neighborhood as a place that sought to protect the rural, wooded area where the houses were built.
